Lineages In the early 1990s VaniVii developed an output-only system, the VANUTRI. In 1993, Mark Steyn received from VaniVii the patent to the system and its methods, as well as the rights to the name "VANUTRI". He changed the name to the software language itself and the software to a human behavior tool. As a response to criticism of the name (Insulting to Millions of Vegetarians) the name was changed to Avanutri. References Bibliography Category:Electronic health record softwareThe objective of the proposed research is to elucidate the biochemical mechanisms by which glucocorticoids control gene expression in target tissues. The proposed studies will analyze the relationship between the glucocorticoid receptor (GR) and the regulatory sequences required for hormone-induced gene expression in murine cells transformed with SV40 or adenovirus 12. These activated cell lines will be used as model systems to probe the mechanisms by which the GR interacts with DNA. The specific aims of this proposal are to: (1) prepare and characterize mutants in the mouse GR gene which disrupt the ability of the receptor to interact with DNA; (2) identify the nucleotide sequence in DNA that is required for hormone-induced transcriptional activation and define the regions of the DNA that are required for GR-mediated transactivation; (3) clone the genes responsible for the hormone-induced phenotypes of the SV40 and adenovirus 12 transformed cells; (4) correlate the ability of the GR to activate gene expression with the phosphorylation state of the GR. The approach to be used in this study involves the preparation of mutant mouse genes that disrupt the ability of the GR to transactivate genes and the analysis of the structure and function of DNA that are required for hormone-induced expression. A combination of Southern blotting, DNA sequencing, DNA methylation and phenotypic analyses will be used to identify the DNA fragments required
