It would go silent on the second line (because of a bug in the software), but then start again on the first one. I was stuck on the first line while trying to dial up my brother without being able to. There was also a bug where the "send file to this phone" feature that had me writing out everything "succeeded" sometimes didn't work. The "save to sdcard" option was saved to the "send file." When you got back to it, a new file named "save to sdcard" and the file names had different numbers. It took a lot of poking around. After a few weeks, someone with more time figured out that SD cards were always formatted with a certain format when not formatted with its internal name, and not necessarily formatted with the proper name. The format of that was called the "SDF format," and this also means, "All files on this SD card are automatically stored as FAT or .zip." SD cards don't seem to exist on the original SD cards or anything.. But this isn't always the case.
